Re: Food and Agribusiness Merger Moratorium and Antitrust Review Act of 2019

Dear Senators and Representatives:

The undersigned 219 farm, food, rural, community, consumer, faith and other advocacy organizations wholeheartedly endorse the Food and Agribusiness Merger Moratorium and Antitrust Review Act of 2019, introduced by Sen. Booker and Rep. Pocan, and urge you to co-sponsor this landmark legislation.

Since the end of the recession, there has been a wave of food and agribusiness mega-mergers that have further consolidated one of the most concentrated sectors in the U.S. economy. These mergers have included farm inputs (seeds and fertilizer), agricultural commodity processors (pork packers, flour millers and more), food manufacturing and supermarkets and retailers. This hyper-consolidation has contributed to declining farm incomes, loss of choice of inputs for farmers, stagnant wages and increased layoffs for workers, higher grocery prices and fewer choices for consumers, the erosion of rural economic vitality and a less resilient food system overall.

The Booker-Pocan Food and Agribusiness Merger Moratorium and Antitrust Review Act of 2019 would initiate a much-needed strategic pause in food and agribusiness merger-mania in order to assess the impact corporate consolidation has on farmers, workers, consumers and communities and recommend improvements to antitrust enforcement.

Few firms dominate the farm business landscape: Only a few firms control almost all the supplies farmers buy such as seeds, fertilizer and farm equipment, raising prices and reducing their choices. Recent seed and fertilizer company mergers threaten to further raise operating costs for farmers. At the same time, farmers sell into very concentrated markets where four firms control almost the entire market and can push down the prices farmers receive for their crops and livestock. For example, the top four firms control 86 percent of corn processing, 85 percent of cattle slaughter, 71 percent of pork packing and 79 percent of soybean crushing.

Independent farm incomes harmed by growing consolidation: Consolidation has contributed to the rising prices farmers pay for supplies and the declining prices farmers receive for their crops and livestock. Farmers now only receive about 14 cents for every dollar spent at the grocery store. Net farm income has declined by half since 2013 and now half of all farmers have negative on-farm income — which means that costs of production now exceed farm earnings.

Corporate domination of farming through unfair contracts: The newer model of vertical integration — where companies own multiple, successive links in the food chain — coerces farmers to surrender their independence to large companies through contracts that direct how farmers run their operations. Companies can and have used these increasingly common contracts to impose unfair, deceptive or even abusive practices on farmers.

Food prices are rising faster than typical wages and families have fewer food choices: Food prices at the supermarket have risen faster than earnings for typical workers. Since 2008, the annual increase in real prices have jumped nearly three times faster than typical earnings. At the same time, merger-mania has left fewer firms in control of more supermarket shelves. Consumers have the illusion of choice at the grocery store, with many products and varieties sold by a dwindling number of companies that can more easily raise prices.

Consolidation across the food chain is harming workers and exacerbating income inequality: There is growing consensus that economic concentration is contributing to widening economic inequality as bigger monopolistic firms fail to raise wages and benefits for their workers. Larger food and agribusiness companies can extract economic value from the food system by pushing down on wages, benefits and working conditions. Mergers often involve substantial layoffs as partnering companies shutter factories and facilities to generate cost savings to be passed onto investors.

Food and agribusiness consolidation erodes rural economic vitality: Fewer, larger food and agribusiness companies have sapped economic activity in rural areas, contributing to the declining number of independent farmers and main street businesses. These farms and small businesses are the economic engine of rural America. The loss of this local economic activity ripples across communities, eroding the stability and sustainability of religious congregations, schools, hospitals and other community organizations.

The unabated consolidation in the food and agribusiness industries has only accelerated in recent years. We urge you to co-sponsor the Food and Agribusiness Merger Moratorium and Antitrust Review Act of 2019 to give America's farmers, workers, consumers and communities a needed break from the merger-mania that has undermined economic security for so many families.
